American Shoes in Germany. Consul Frank H. Mason at Berlin trans-mits to the State Department an interesting and suggestive article published in a prominent German trade journal, which prominent German trade journal, which confirms previous statements that American-made shoes are supplanting those of German make and rapidly and surely revolutionizing the shoe manufacturing industry in that country. But in order to achieve an important and permanent success, says Consul Mason, American shoe exporters must either establish a wholesale depot in Germany or open their own retail stores in Hamburg, Berlin, Leipzig, Frankfort and other principal cities. Neither of these things has been done, and an English firm manufacturing by American methods, the consul says, is reaping what the timid exporters of the United States have sown.
